

99 WRITING

Still

by Franny, 826CHI

TYPE POETRY STEM We are not quite back on Earth yet. Some adjustments should be made. Make sure to spin and jump, tighten your shoulders, unlock your knees, falling, even when you want to, can land you on the hard side of our bed. Our bed, in this moment: two stacked mattresses, because one will not bounce you high enough to reach the universe we know is in Mars. Maybe we do know everything. We know our birthstone ruby, baths warm beaches unsalted and leg hair-full. How to sleep, play dead,

and convince them

our dog was a prince once and still remembered.

Our bathroom lock still works

and we paint our own nails.

One little sister and one on the way.

Three mattresses and a baby girl coming.

We want to name her Luna.

And you remember that? Still?

But you are no ruby,

no lake.

You're an undomestic, an ocean,

you've hollowed Mars,

and you remember?

Unbend your knees and

some adjusting.

Do not land hard.