

99 WRITING

The Origins of Fries

by Kathryn, 826NYC

TYPE INFORMATIONAL POETRY STEM

In the beginning, there were only seven planets. Each planet had its own suns and moons, but there was one sun and four moons that didn't have a planet to call their own.

The sun and moons were always bickering, they screamed and argued about which was longer, day or night. Finally, the other planets had had enough! They shook and shook with anger.

Pieces of rock were flying everywhere and the rocks recollected to form earth. Three of the moons were so scared that they became dust and floated down to Earth.

They became the dirt and plants. The rest of the rocks became seeds for food and as they passed through the atmosphere, the rocks became potatoes and then french fries.