Hi, my name is Amanda Jonathan. I'm thirty-four. I was once a doctor, and I love the color pink, and I'm gonna tell you about my life and how I became the first female president.

So one day I was on the bus, sitting by a really smelly man who smelled like cigarettes. I saw a newspaper on the floor of the bus, and it said something about voting and electing people for president. So the next day I decided to run for president. The day I decided I was gonna run for president, I was so proud because I said, "I could be the first female president." That's what happened at the time around the bus day.

When I become president, I would like for every single child to get their full education. I would also like for the people to have more food and more housing. And as president, these will be my goals to help my community. There should also be more friendly attitudes. And when there's a lot of snow everywhere, I will make sure there are snow blowers so everyone can go to work. And maybe children can have a snow day.

It took me a while to become president. As president, I have way more responsibility than at work when I was a doctor. As president, I have meetings twenty-four-seven and it’s so hard, but I can make it through. Being president makes me happy about myself. Being president is a blessing to me.
